B 次の英文は，中学生の晴香（Haruka）が，授業中にスピーチしている場面のものです。これを読んで，問いに答えなさい。

Now, many old people live alone and feel *lonely. At the same time, for young people, it's difficult to find cheap houses. These are becoming problems in Japanese *society. But there's a good idea called "intergenerational home share" that can help them solve these problems. Let me tell you more about it.

In intergenerational home share, old people and young people live together in the same house. This helps both sides. Old people can talk with young people. This makes the old people less lonely. Also, young people, like college students, can pay less *money for rent. This helps the young people *save money. People living there sometimes cook and eat meals together. These things can make their lives happier. As a result, intergenerational home share helps both old and young people [　　] .

Some old people may think their rooms are too small for young people. However, there are many young people who don't think the size is a big problem, and the young people who chose intergenerational home share enjoy living with old people. If I lived there, I would teach the old people how to buy tickets online with a smartphone. Also, I'd like to communicate with the old people and learn from them.

The idea of intergenerational home share has already become popular in other countries like the U.S. and France, but many Japanese people don't know about this idea yet. So, I'd like to learn more about it from other countries to make Japanese society better, then introduce it to many people in the future.
