Have you ever heard of cashless *payment? It means paying money without using *cash. Today, many people all around the world use cashless payment. The number of shops that *accept cashless payment is getting bigger in Japan, too. Actually, I often use cashless payment when I go shopping.

Cashless payment has many good points. For example, people can buy almost anything *twenty-four seven on the Internet by using it. Many people think using cashless payment is very [　　] because it takes less time than paying by cash, and I believe that cashless payment is great. But, I also think that having cash is important. There was an event that made me think so.

One day, my friends and I went to a small cookie shop which is very popular among high school students. We were very excited to see some cute cookies there, and we tried to buy some of them with cashless payment on a smartphone. However, the shop didn't accept it, and we didn't have any cash on that day. After that, I became interested in why some shops don't accept cashless payment. In fact, some shops don't use cashless payment because they must pay a *fee to the cashless payment company.

Now, I understand more about cashless payment, and I think people should be ready to pay in different ways for each situation.
