3 あなたは食品ロスについて興味をもち，インターネットで調べていると，日本を訪れたソフィア（Sophia）が投稿した文章を見つけました。これを読み，あとの問いに答えなさい。

When I visited Japan, I enjoyed shopping at supermarkets. One day, while I was looking for snacks, I noticed a small sign on a food shelf. It said temaedori in Japanese. I found the same sign at different stores. I didn't know this word, so I wanted to understand its meaning.

The next day, I asked my Japanese friend about it. She explained that temaedori means choosing items from the front because they have the closest expiration date. This helps the stores reduce food waste and sell products before the expiration date. She told me that many stores in Japan encourage this practice. I was surprised at this idea. In my country, people often take the freshest items from the back, but in Japan, customers are encouraged to think about food waste. I decided to try temaedori during my stay.

After returning home, I kept choosing items from the front. I also shared this experience with my friends and family. Many of them were surprised but agreed with this great idea. I hope more people around the world will learn about temaedori. It can help us reduce food waste.
